

Song for A.

(von Francesca Buri / www.francescaburi.ch)

*Where have you been all this time, where have you been hiding
A captive of your own, not having control over your steps, away are they leading....
Once charming, shining bright, always admired, giving a shit about conventions Eloquent, sparkling, always knowing how to attract each and every attention*

*Who has told you that you have to be perfect
Who has told you that you have to be that strong
Now you're down and stopped pretending
The price is high and I'm afraid of the end*

*Where have all your visions gone, is that your purpose or what went wrong
With whom are you fighting deep inside, oh I wish you could see the light, oh I wish you could see the light*

*You call yourself a miserable man, don't you know that you are full of grace
You blame yourself for your losses and mistakes, I can see it in your face
But the truth is that you gave me love, gave me support whenever I needed it
It's a long time ago but I still remember and do appreciate it*

*We all are captives of our breeding but there are ways to free ourselves
You are more than what they have told you
You are different than what you have shown us*

*Where have all your visions gone, is that your purpose or what went wrong
With whom are you fighting deep inside, oh I wish you could see the light,
oh I wish you could see the light*

*In case you failed to notice there are still people who care for you
To build a wall around you and push us all away won't serve you See the beauty that you gave to the world and be ready to receive her love
Let me tell you that you are precious no matter what you believe*

*I tell you about the treasure that you gave to me
You gave me the music, the singing, your blessed voice
It leads me, supports me, comforts me, guides me
Through my whole life*